Few art forms have had a greater impact on modern culture than cinema. Over the course of cinema's relatively brief history, film criticism and theory have grappled with some of the issues most central to the humanities, including how to represent and transform the world and how technological changes have affected the production and consumption of images. As an academic discipline, cinema studies has addressed these and attendant issues through a range of strategies, directing attention both to the highest form of rarified art practice and to the most popular forms of entertainment and diversion.

The minor in cinema studies focuses on the history, theory, and culture of film and related media such as digital media and photography. It makes coherent both the historical and aesthetic dimensions of cinema, including the mutual influence of cinema with its cultural, technological, national, and transnational contexts. As a distinct field of study influenced by a range of disciplines—among them art history, English, and the sciences—the minor draws its strength from connections among departments, while at the same time providing a core of courses foundational to the discipline of cinema studies itself.

Requirements for the Minor in Cinema Studies

Six courses, including Cinema Studies 142, 251 or 252, 321, one non-U.S. cinema studies course, and two electives selected from the list of courses approved for the minor or approved by the director. No more than two courses can count toward both the cinema studies minor and another minor or major.

- 242 Ethnic Wars and Peace in (Post-)Soviet Cinema
Latin America, Europe, Australia, and East Asia, we will consider the interrelation of national and global factors that have led to the trace the evolution of a global genre from early cinema to contemporary examples. Through screening films and reading texts drawn from ideas of form, space, violence, and politics are reconfigured in different contexts. Beginning with questions of genre more broadly, we will develop an understanding of the historical, national, economic, aesthetic, and cultural contexts of films produced and received by international audiences in the second half of cinema history. They will also gain proficiency in written and oral communication and develop their skills in critical thinking.

CI251f    History of International Cinema I
The first of a two-semester survey of the history of global cinema, providing a broad overview of the development of cinema as an art form from the beginning of cinema (c. 1890) to 1945. Students will develop an understanding of the historical, national, economic, aesthetic, and cultural contexts of films produced and received by international audiences in the first half of cinema history. They will also gain an understanding of the mechanics and aesthetics of analogue cinema.  Three credit hours.

CI252s    History of International Cinema II
The second of a two-semester survey of the history of global cinema. Provides students with a broad overview of the development of cinema as an art form from the midpoint of cinema’s history (1945) to the present. Students will develop an understanding of the historical, national, economic, aesthetic, and cultural contexts of films produced and received by international audiences in the second half of cinema history. They will also gain proficiency in written and oral communication and develop skills in critical thinking.  Four credit hours.

CI280s    Topics in Global Cinema: The Global Western
Examines the western genre from a global perspective in order to consider how ideas of form, space, violence, and politics are reconfigured in different contexts. Beginning with questions of genre more broadly, we will trace the evolution of a global genre from early cinema to contemporary examples. Through screening films and reading texts drawn from Latin America, Europe, Australia, and East Asia, we will consider the interrelation of national and global factors that have led to the emergence and the adoption of the western as a popular genre. Prerequisite: Cinema Studies 142 or English 142.  Four credit hours.

WESSELS

CI284f  Documentary Film: History and Theory  Examines documentary cinema through historical and theoretical perspectives. We explore the dominant aesthetic approaches to global nonfiction filmmaking and how they changed over time. Students will encounter different theoretical perspectives on the relationships between cinema, reality, ideology, and power, and we will consider the social and ethical issues raised by documentary film. Through writing assignments (both short informal writings and longer argumentative papers) and class discussions, students will critically and creatively engage with an important category of cinema. Prerequisite: Cinema Studies 142.

Four credit hours.

WURTZLER

CI285s  Experimental Cinema  Explores the international history of experimental cinema from the European modernists of the 1920s to contemporary practices. We focus on cinema’s relationship to the other arts (poetry, painting, photography, dance) and the aesthetic approaches of a variety of films that are more comfortable in an art gallery than in a multiplex. Through writing assignments (both short informal writing and longer argumentative papers) and class discussions, students will critically and creatively engage with this important category of global cinema. Prerequisite: Cinema Studies 142.

Four credit hours.

WURTZLER

CI298As  Visual Storytelling: Found Materials and the Archive  In the past century, humans have created (and lost) so many visual objects — from 16mm films of vacations, to snapshots of graduations and birthdays, to scrapbooks from childhood, to postcards from abroad. More recently we have created and forgotten about Snapchats, Facebook posts, and digital videos. We will take these ephemeral materials and bring them back to life through the art of visual storytelling. We will use materials from our own lives, from the Colby archive in Special Collections, and from the Northeast Historic Film archive to tell new and compelling stories. Students will also learn how to shoot and edit digital video. Origins humanities lab.

Four credit hours.

MURPHY

CI298Bs  Advanced Documentary Production  Students will deepen their documentary filmmaking practice by planning, shooting, and editing their own documentary short. They will choose their subject and spend substantial time researching and planning the film before shooting and editing. They will become more familiar with various modes of documentary storytelling in order to develop their own creative process. They will also be required to assist their peers on shoots and to give high-quality feedback on works-in-progress. Prerequisite: Cinema Studies 245.

Four credit hours.

MURPHY

CI321Af  Topics in Film Theory: Cinema/Landscape  Individual courses offered under the rubric of Topics in Film Theory will change in specific focus but keep consistent the rigorous engagement with a theoretical issue central to cinema studies. Students collaboratively engage with a set of questions regarding the nature of cinema and its relationships with power. Through both informal and formal analytical writing as well as class discussions and formal presentations, students not only develop a greater understanding of cinema but also enhance their written, critical, and verbal skills. Prerequisite: Cinema Studies 142 or equivalent.

Four credit hours.

WURTZLER

CI321Bs  Topics in Film Theory: Mainely Cinema: Film and the Archive  Focuses on the study of local cinema production and reception, as well as how images of a particular location (Maine) develop meaning. Provides both a theoretical framework for archival research and practical experience engaging with archival materials. Students will take a research trip to the Northeast Historic Film archives in Bucksport, develop their own research projects related to film in Maine, and create a website to share their findings publicly. Origins humanities lab.

Prerequisite: Cinema Studies 142 or equivalent.

Four credit hours.

WESSELS

CI491f, 492s  Independent Study  Individual topics in areas where the student has demonstrated the interest and competence necessary for independent work.

One to four credit hours.
